

WELCOME TO THE FOURTH NEWSLETTER OF THE HYPER PROJECT!

The HYPER project is an Erasmus+ funded project, which aims to empower young people to safeguard themselves from online threats, and to support them in building awareness about the threat of online radicalisation. We are now coming to the end of our 2-year project and planning our final tasks in the HYPER project. Read this newsletter to find about the work we have completed over the final months of HYPER.

Training Youth Trainers!

What wonderful plans we had for this project, to bring youth educators from across Europe together at a transnational training event along the English coast, hosted by Lancaster and Morecambe College (LMC). Unfortunately, COVID-19 had other ideas, and instead of enjoying fish and chips on the pier, youth educators attended a two-day training programme hosted by LMC online, through Zoom.

While our plans changed, our enthusiasm for promoting our HYPER training package with front-line youth educators across Europe did not falter, and the online version of the transnational training event was a success!

Over the course of the two-day online training, project partners collaborated to host interactive sessions to promote, share and test the HYPER simulation and self-help resources for youth workers and young people, the induction training programme for youth workers and parents, and the peer education programme for young people.

Throughout the online sessions, youth educators were presented with the project's learning materials, and then given the opportunity to collaborate in small teams through breakout rooms, to review the content from their own context and to make plans for how these learning materials could be applied to their youth work practice.

Overall, this resulted in an active, collaborative and highly enjoyable online training programme, which afforded youth educators from each country the opportunity to raise their awareness of how young people are susceptible to online radicalisation.

HYPER Online

Due to COVID-19, project partners have not been able to deliver all of the actions of the HYPER project as planned. However, as this project aims to support young people, youth workers and parents to safeguard young people in online environments, what better way to promote this project than through a safe online environment!

HYPER partners have been working over the final months of the project to deliver training workshops and promotional events for HYPER, online through our HYPER online platform, with some face-to-face sessions where it has been safe to do so.

To support the delivery of these online events, all simulation videos and accompanying learning materials have been made available through our online platform – HYPER Space.

To access the simulation videos that we produced to show how radicalisation occurs online, you can visit the dedicated page on our website: <https://hyper-project.eu/hyper-vidz/>

To gain an insight into how these videos can be used to support young people in your circles to protect themselves and their peers from online dangers, or to view the content in our peer education programme and our training programme for youth workers, you can access our full suite of learning materials at: <https://hyper-project.eu/hyper-toolz/>
